

Films lookahead: 20 movies not to miss in 2020

Hindsight is 20/20, the old saying goes. But we're in the foresight business here at BBC News, and now the other 2020 is fast upon us it's time we predicted what films will be rocking your world over the next 12 months.

From anarchic satire to blockbuster sequels to the return of some of the biggest names in cinema, there is plenty to look forward to.

Mulan (27 March)

Dumbo, Lady and the Tramp, Aladdin and The Lion King all got the live-action remake treatment in 2018. This year will see Disney's 1998 animation Mulan follow in their hoof/foot/paw-prints.

The film tells of a young woman who disguises herself as a man to fight in place of her ailing father in China's imperial army.

ailing 生病的

Chinese-American actress Liu Yifei plays the legendary warrior in Niki Caro's film, which also stars Jason Scott Lee, Jet Li and Donnie Yen.

But don't go in expecting to hear Eddie Murphy, as his wise-cracking dragon Mushu won't be making a reappearance.

No Time To Die (3 April)

With Sam Mendes otherwise engaged on 1917 and Danny Boyle bowing out, it's been left to Cary Joji Fukunaga to bring the latest Bond to the screen.

It has certainly been an eventful shoot, what with leading man Daniel Craig hurting his ankle and a crew member getting injured in an on-set explosion.

The film will see a retired Bond called back into action to confront a dangerous new adversary, played by Bohemian Rhapsody Oscar-winner Rami Malek.

Eternals (6 November)

Angelina Jolie leads a group of immortal super-beings in 2020's second offering from the MCU (Marvel Cinematic Universe).

Salma Hayek, Richard Madden and Kumail Nanjiani also appear in Chloe Zhao's film, one of the more ambitious components of Marvel's so-called "Phase 4".
